

SPARTAN COACHING

THE SITUATION
spartancoaching.com

Practical systems for hospice growth professionals.
Built in the field. Coached with discipline.

Hundreds of thousands of Americans die every year without hospice care who would have qualified for it. The average hospice length of stay hovers around eighteen days. The Medicare benefit allows up to six months.

That gap does not exist because of bad clinical decisions. It exists because the right conversations did not happen. A referral that did not get made. A physician who said "not yet" to a rep who did not know how to respond. An eligible patient who never got asked.

100,000s

Eligible patients unreached each year

This is not a volume problem. It is an execution problem.

The hospice organizations closing that gap are not necessarily the largest or the best-resourced. They are the ones where the sales function works. Where reps know exactly who they are seeing and why. Where leaders can look at the pipeline and actually coach from it. Where the messaging respects the physician and earns the referral.

Most organizations are not there yet. Not because the people are not good. Because the system is not built.

WHAT GETS IN THE WAY

The patterns that show up in nearly every hospice sales organization:

No repeatable playbook

Reps develop their own approaches. Some work. Most plateau. Nobody can coach what is not written down.

Messaging that pushes referral sources away

Scripts built around the product, not the patient. Physicians and facility staff disengage. Relationships stall.

Activity without accountability

Visit counts are tracked. What happened in those visits is not. Leaders have data they cannot act on.

Leaders coaching numbers instead of people

Census reviews happen. Skill development does not. The same conversations keep repeating with no resolution.

WHO THIS IS

Spartan Coaching

Spartan Coaching was built by Nick Lynch from a pattern he kept seeing in the field. Good people. Real intentions. Genuine care for patients and families. And yet the execution was inconsistent, the pipeline was flat, and leaders were reviewing numbers without knowing how to change them.

The problem was never motivation. Hospice professionals are among the most mission-driven people in healthcare. The problem was structure. Teams had good values and no system. They had goals and no playbook. They had activity and no accountability rhythm that anyone could actually coach from.

Spartan Coaching was built to close that gap. Not through motivation. Not through a conference or a seminar. Through a practical, teachable, repeatable system that any committed rep can run and any skilled leader can coach.

"Ethics without structure does not scale. Structure without heart does not last. We teach both."

ABOUT NICK LYNCH

Nick Lynch brings two things into hospice coaching that most people keep separate: what liaisons see in the field every day and what leaders need to see to coach performance without guessing.

He has led field sales teams, worked alongside clinical staff, and spent real time on ride-alongs, seeing firsthand where good plans break down and what actually holds up. When a territory feels unclear, he uses eligibility data and claims analysis to separate what is true from what is assumed, then turns it into a simple plan the team can run consistently.

When Nick steps away, leaders are not just looking at numbers. They understand the people behind them. They know what each rep is strong at, where they hesitate, what they avoid, and what they need next. They can coach the person, not just the pipeline.

ONE THING WORTH SAYING

This introduction is not a pitch. If your organization is growing and your team is executing well, this is not something you need right now. If there are eligible patients in your markets who are not being reached, or if your sales function feels like it is running on effort instead of a system, that is worth a conversation.

No pressure. No obligation. Just an honest 30 minutes to understand where your team is and whether working together makes sense for both sides.
